WATERBURY WINTERFEST

The score: 'Freezing to freezing'

WATERBURY — If you were on the inside looking out in Waterbury on Saturday, a broomball tournament sounded like a fine idea.

The sun was shining, the ice was nice and there wasn't a cloud in the sky.

Outside was a different story. The wind was whipping, it was 7 degrees below zero, and you could almost hear Mother Nature saying: "I dare you" as the second day of Waterbury's 10-day Winterfest celebration kicked off with a flurry of previously scheduled outdoor activities.

To make a long story short:

They dared, and had a gosh darned good time doing it.

Two of Saturday's events were daylong tournaments — one broomball, the other volleyball. Both were played on Anderson Field near the smoldering remnants of a bonfire that consumed a record 353 Christmas trees that were torched as part of Friday night's opening ceremony.

Gordon Miller gazed wistfully at the ash-stained circle of ice surrounded by random bits of singed evergreen after he officiated the first in the series of volleyball matches that were played throughout the day as MORETOWN — An invite into the Moretown home of Emily Johnson and Brian Mohr shows that they live well, albeit simply. It's probably a reflection of spending more than 1,000 nights in a tent.

"Living simply is truly luxurious," says Mohr.

They are adventure photographers, a husband-and-wife team whose work has appeared in a long list of magazines like Backcountry, Mountain, Freeskier, Powder, Ski Journal and Women's Adventure.

Their clients have included Ibex, Badger Balm, Patagonia and REI, just to name a few. Among their fine-art prints (available at www.emberphoto.com), there are two for which they seem to be best known: One shows the frosty single-chair of Mad River Glen's famed ski lift and the other a freshly laid ski track through back-country champagne powder.

Johnson and Mohr are two 30-something professionals who call Vermont home, even in an age when many young

'This is a holdup'

13 years after the biggest heist in Vermont history, new details come to light

(Editor's note: This is the first in a series looking into the investigation of the unsolved $1.9 million robbery at Berkshire Armored Car Co. on Jan. 31, 2002, in Rutland. Investigators have been tight-lipped for years. This series focuses on recently released federal documents containing interviews, internal memos and other investigative materials compiled since the biggest robbery in Vermont's history.)

It was 5:35 a.m., snowing lightly, Thursday, Jan. 31, 2002, when a Berkshire Armored Car Co., employee arrived for work at the Howe Center in Rutland and was greeted by a man wielding a revolver.

"If you want to live, open the door. Don't look at me," the masked gunman said, speaking with a nasal New York accent.

That Got Away

The Berkshire employee, a 19-year driver for the company whose name was redacted by FBI officials who responded to a Freedom of Information Act request from the Rutland Herald, told investigators he turned around and opened the door to the terminal that housed the vault and $1.9 million.

So began the biggest heist that Rutland or Vermont has ever seen — a crime perpetrated, to all appearances, by a lone gunman.

Thirteen years later, local and federal law enforcement are no closer to solving the case or recovering the stolen money than they were the day of the robbery. And the case has been officially mothballed by the FBI pending any new evidence that could lead to criminal charges that haven't expired under the statute of limitations.

Why Pats should wear 4th crown

By HOWARD ULMAN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHOENIX — Go ahead, pile on the Patriots.

Declare the Bill Belichick-Tom Brady era over after they split their first four games this season. Call them cheaters when their footballs lose too much air. Predict the Legion of Boom will bring the hammer down on Rob Gronkowski.

Then jump on the New England bandwagon.

Watch one of the greatest quarterbacks ever lower the pressure on himself with handoffs to big LeGarrette Blount and quick passes to small receivers Julian Edelman and Danny Amendola. See the second-best defense in the Super Bowl silence Marshawn Lynch's running and put the burden on Russell Wilson to move the Seattle Seahawks with his arm and legs.

Finally, concede that the Lombardi Trophy raised by New England owner Robert Kraft on Sunday night is well deserved, no matter how much fans of 31 other teams dislike the leader with the hoodie and the scowl — and his fourth Super Bowl championship as coach of the Patriots.

"No matter what goes on around this game or outside this locker room, whatever it may be, you have to be ready to play," defensive tackle Vince Wifork said. "We can't let any distraction alter our course of what we want to be and how we want to do it."

They want to be champions. How can they do it against the NFL's best defense?

Start with Brady getting rid of the ball fast to a runner or receiver. Or let Gronkowski occupy two defenders after lining up wide, in the slot or beside a tackle. Or toss in some trickery — maybe a double reverse or even a flea-flicker.

There's no end to Belichick's football imagination.

What would he like to establish early?

"What I'd like to establish is the lead," he said Friday, flashing a rare grin he breaks out in the Super Bowl spotlight as if trying to show there's more to him than

Last-minute goal lifts Tide

BARRE — Luke Krupa's power-play in the final minute of regulation earned Spaulding a 2-1 win over Rutland before over 300 fans on Make-A-Wish Night at the B.O.R.

Krupa one-timed a pass across the top of the zone from Matt Clark-Blouin. Denver Heath also assisted.

"I knew it was coming to me and I tried to shoot it far side," Krupa said of his third goal of the season. "It's very exciting. We're having a great season, but we needed the win. We're all working hard trying to get to the top of the division. We're getting there."

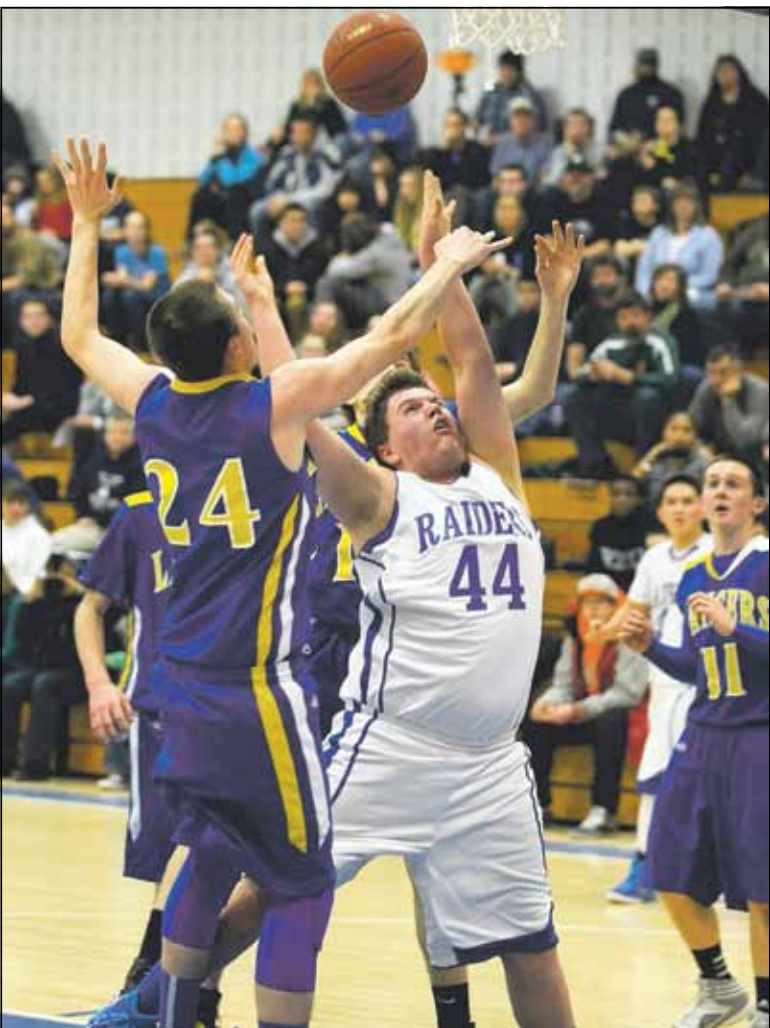

Before Krupa's game-winning the Tide and the Raiders had battled to a scoreless standoff for 43 of the first 44 minutes. The teams' earlier goals came 40 seconds apart halfway through the second period.

The Raiders struck first with a goal by Evan Abatiell, who first gained possession of a pass from Tyler Truman in the left circle with his back to the goal line. He got off a backhand that went in at 6:05. Kevin Macfarlane was also credited with an assist.

The Tide answered when Bobby Austin worked the puck free from behind the net and threw it in off the skate of teammate Chandler Cressey, who was credited with the goal.

"That was two teams evenly competing," Rutland coach Chris Creed said. "Hats off to them. They executed when it counted most. This game follows the script of the season for the most part. There are plenty of good goalies out there and not a lot of dangerous scorers. If a team can score two or three goals,

EAST MONTPELIER — The last time U-32 faced off against Lamoille, the Lancers turned a close game entering the fourth into a nine-point win.

The Raiders returned the favor Saturday. U-32 (9-6) hit nine 3-pointers en route to a 60-47 victory over Lamoille (11-2).

"This time we came out and had a better idea of how they were put together and what they were trying to do," U-32 coach Dan Gauthier said. "I keep telling these guys to be aggressive, and we never know who's going to step up. Today solidified that."

A balanced scoring attack, with four players in double-digits, and a lights-out percentage from 3-point range powered U-32 to the win. Kyle Graves scored 17 points in the victory and was supported by Jordan Moore (13 points), Jackson McCoy (11 points) and Kyle Booth (10 points).

The Lancers, meanwhile, dropped their second game of the year while seeing a three-game winning streak snapped. It was

Williams becomes oldest woman to win tennis major

By JOHN PYE

MELBOURNE, Australia — Serena Williams stuck out a fist in mock triumph and mouthed "C'mon," careful not to push her point too far.

The 33-year-old Williams was closing in on her 19th Grand Slam singles title, her 16th straight win over Maria Sharapova and her sixth Australian Open championship when she was docked a point by the chair umpire for hindrance — for yelling in celebration too early when she thought she'd hit a service winner.

She didn't let that, or another early celebration on match point, or a hacking cough that made her sick, become distractions. Instead, Williams maintained her composure to beat Sharapova 6-3, 7-6 (5) on Saturday night to continue her 100 percent record in finals at Melbourne Park and move closer to Steffi Graf's record of 22 major titles in the Open era.

"I got too excited and I hit a great serve ... I didn't expect her to get it back," Williams explained of the hindrance call in the seventh game of the second set. "I said, 'C'mon', a little too soon. I guess there's a rule that you can't do it. So I'm fine with it. I moved on very fast to the next point; just tried to stay as focused as I could."

The muted fist pump, she said, was just for fun.

"I'm like, 'C'mon.' It just goes to show you I have more fun on the court. I would have never done that three years ago, four years ago," said Williams, who has let similar calls upset her in the past. "So I just kind of made a little sarcasm after that."
